

Report New Chief for CIA

Allen W. Dulles is expected to be replaced as director of the Central Intelligence Agency in October by Wall St. lawyer Fowler Hamilton.

There was no official confirmation from the White House, and Hamilton said at his home in Greenwich, Conn., that "I'm afraid I can't say anything until I'm officially informed."

A report in tomorrow's issue of Newsweek magazine that Hamilton soon would move into a CIA office and would succeed Dulles in October was not denied by official sources.

Although one of President Kennedy's first acts after he took office was to announce he was retaining Dulles, there have been increasing reports since the Cuban invasion fiasco in mid-April that he would be replaced.

Changes in the CIA organization have been recommended by committees headed by Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor (ret.), special military adviser to the President, and by James R. Killian Jr., board chairman of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Hamilton, 50, a native of Kansas City, Mo., has the backing of Sen. Symington (D-Mo.). He was special counsel to a Symington subcommittee on air power.

He has had experience in government intelligence work. During World War II he was chief of the enemy branch of the Board of Economic Warfare and a member of the Joint Intelligence Staff and the Strategic Bombing Target Committee.

A graduate of the University of Missouri, Hamilton was a Rhodes scholar at Oxford. He joined the Justice Dept. as a special assistant in 1938, and directed its war frauds unit in 1942.

He also was chief legal counsel to the Justice Dept. and won an anti-trust suit against Pullman, Inc., requiring it to divorce its manufacturing operations from its servicing.

Hamilton, a Democrat, reportedly met secretly with President Kennedy a few weeks ago and later with Dulles.

Dulles had no comment on the impending change.

Hamilton is a member of the law firm of Cleary, Gottlieb, Steen & Hamilton of 52 Wall St.
